

Module 18: Take a Movement Break

Participant Guide

Session Focus

In this session, we will talk about:

- The link between sitting still and type 2 diabetes
- Some challenges of taking movement breaks and ways to overcome them

You will also make a new action plan!

Tips:

- ✓ Keep track of how much time you spend sitting still each day.
- ✓ Try to take a 2-minute movement break every 30 minutes.

Sitting Still and Type 2 Diabetes

Terry's Story

Terry is at risk for type 2 diabetes. Her doctor asks her to be active for at least 150 minutes a week at a moderate pace or more. Over time, she reaches that goal.

Terry's doctor then asks her to start tracking the time she spends sitting still. Here's what she finds.

In the morning, Terry sits while taking the train to work. She spends most of the workday sitting at her desk, using the computer. Sometimes she talks on the phone or has a meeting—also sitting. She eats her lunch at her desk while working or while sitting at a table in the staff room. After work, she takes the train home. Later that evening, she watches TV while sitting on the couch.

When Terry adds up all that time, she is surprised by what she learns. It turns out she sits still for about 12 out of the 16 hours that she's awake. So even though she gets her 150 minutes of activity a week, Terry spends an awful lot of time sitting still.

Terry decides to take action. At first, she felt overwhelmed with adding movement breaks into her day on top of getting her 150 minutes of activity in each week. So, she began taking small steps to include her 2-minute movement breaks. To start, Terry decided to stand up during her train rides. After this became routine, she then began getting in her movement breaks at work. She started with a 2-minute break every couple of hours and has now worked up to taking a break every hour. Terry is using an app on her phone to remind herself to take her 2-minute movement breaks. At work, she also walks around her office while she talks on the phone and uses an exercise ball at the computer. Terry feels better than ever and is working toward her goal of taking a 2-minute movement break every 30 minutes.

Take a Movement Break

For ideas on taking movement breaks, refer to this CDC resource guide, “Physical Activity Breaks for the Workplace.”

How To Overcome Challenges

It can be challenging to take movement breaks. Here are some common challenges and ways to overcome them. Write your own ideas in the column that says “Other Ways To Overcome.” Check off each idea you try.
